

The RecordMax Companies Upgrade Security Systems With New High End Surveillance Technologies

July 26th, 2012 – New Orleans, Louisiana; Mobile, Alabama; Chattanooga, Tennessee

RecordMax has enhanced its commitment to protecting the facilities in which it houses client documents, data and other information assets through a new relationship with Revo America; a premium provider of medium to high-end surveillance systems.

The analysis and genesis that led to choosing RecordMax's new surveillance system partner ultimately started with a new certification program. Recognized industry association PRISM International's new Privacy+ program requires monitoring of every physical entrance to any RecordMax facility 24/7/365. With all other requirements in place, surveillance system implementation became a defined objective for 2012.

Choosing the right video security systems for RecordMax started with a formal needs analysis. Systems had to be affordable but had to be high quality. Systems had to be scalable. Systems had to include remote viewing over a wide geographic area. Systems had to offer the resolution necessary to assure appropriate benefits to the business and law enforcement. Systems had to offer multiple recording options. Systems had to include night vision technology. And systems had to include transfer of backed up video to protected remote environments.

After consulting with recognized experts (people with significant surveillance system experience) and existing RecordMax security system vendors (that provide entry contact, motion, audio and fire protection monitoring), RecordMax implemented the first system in the New Orleans operation this past week. Installations in Chattanooga and Mobile will roll out in the next 30 days. Customer assets have always been well protected. However new systems take facility security to a whole new level while ensuring that RecordMax is fully compliant for Privacy+.
